

Escardy Gap

This carnival of wonders and horrors ... a feast for anyone who loves fantasy and language (Ramsey Campbell) tells the macabre story of a writer literally struggling with the creatures of his own imagination. Literate, funny, and filled with great imagery.--Rex Miller, author of The Jack Eichord series.

As he continues to write, the train's destination appears on the horizon: a small town from the 1950s Escardy Gap. Escardy Gap is a re-creation of the writer's hometown in the Midwest. Who or what is on the train and why it has come to Escardy Gap does not seem important.
