

Ten Months in Iran

Ten Months in Iran is a true story about Americans working in Iran and their troubles, challenges and stress of working in an Islamic country where you can be jailed for urinating on a wall or in the direction of Mecca. It also points out the moral abandonment of a few while away from friends and family. The author escaped from Iran just prior to the Ayatollahs return. During the author's last night in Isfahan he stood on the roof of his house near the University of Isfahan and watched the gun fights between soldiers and rioters. Later that same night he watched an army truck and two men move slowly down the street picking up the dead. After he returned home he found out that a few of the Iranian Army and Air Force officers and men he became friends with were executed when the Ayatollah seized power. This is also a love story because the author fell in love with a beautiful, young Iranian woman he had to leave behind.
